Prague, October 2011

Please use this form to share with others any research or testing that your national Society is doing with regard to first aid education.

National Society	British Red Cross
Project name	Assessing the Links between Community Resilience and First Aid Learning
Summary of project: what is being tested or researched?	To examine if there is evidence of community resilience as a result of receiving first aid training from the British Red Cross
Timing of project (has it just started, how long will it run, has it finished etc?)	The data for this project was collected from January to May 2011. It is now complete
Results (if your project has finished)	Confidence is a measurable outcome of first aid training Communities learn better than individuals Context and frequency of training are significant factors People under 19 exhibited lower levels of community resilience
Next steps: what do you plan to do next?	We are carrying out further testing on the resilience of individuals following group learning against individual learning
